Not That One!

Description: As Mormon's abridged record comes to a close, this fun and silly game will help your family review many of the stories they've learned this year from the Book of Mormon.

What you need:

- A copy of "Not That One!" activity game board (artwork included with this lesson,) small treats like marshmallows, chocolate chips, or cereal

Preparation: 1. Print one copy of the game board.

Activity: (Younger children will need help from an older sibling or parent.)

Explain: The Book of Mormon contains a record of the Nephites and Lamanites. Mormon abridged (or summarized) the records of his people onto gold plates. Joseph Smith translated that record into the Book of Mormon. We're going to review some of the stories we've learned this year with a game!

Place the game board in the middle of the group. Cover each space/scripture story with one of the small treats. Choose a family member to be "it". "It" goes out of the room while the other family members quietly choose one of the scripture story spaces. "It" is then allowed back in the room. "It" begins eating the treats on the game board one by one. If they touch the treat on the selected space, everyone yells, "Not that one!" "It" then tells the story from the selected space as well as they can (family members can help!) A new person is chosen to be "it" and the spaces are again covered with treats. Play continues until everyone has had a turn.
